JFK speech, March 1st, 1962, special message to Congress on conservation, White House

"I don't think there is anything that could occupy our attention with more distinction than trying to preserve for those who come after us this beautiful country we have inherited."

"Our national conservation must include the complete spectrum of resources: air, water, and land; fuels, energy, and minerals; soils, forests, and forage; fish and wildlife. Together, they make up the world of nature which surrounds us."

Climate is changing
